"When he brought out the telegram from Bowles Baker to Lieut. Gov. Young, of Ohlo, and Alfred D. Lee, then Governof Ohlo, and Alfred D. Lee, then Governor Hayes' private secretary, February 26, 1877, the leer, the sardonic grin, which over-spread his countenance was horrible. His lateral eye ran down his left cheek like a horrid gash received in a general melee, such as might have been given from friend to friend in the hurly burly at the foot of Pompey's statue when Cessar fell. The long ropy, fringelike, thick cord that acts as a curtain to his ill-shaped head, seemed as he promised to connect that telegram and its reply with the subject of the investigation, to writhe and wriggle like a neat of serpent; and when he drew back his seessuous lips in what was evidently intended for a smile, the effect was like the earth yawning for the emission of fatal gases in the Valley of Death. He looks dull, heavy and stupid when his face is in repose and his slanting eyes closed, but when he grins, he is as ugly as Caliban and infinitely more dangerous."

The speech of Butler has a significance that reaches beyond the present hour. He is a man extreme in his view, revolutionary in his character, and utterly regardless of public sentiment as embodied in the leading journals of the country. Time and again has he expressed his sovereign contempt of the public press as the enlightened exponent of the opinions of the masses upon all the great questions of public policy that have arisen in these latter days.

Distinctly and positively allied with the revolutionary element of Congres, openly avowing his dissent from the letter and spirit of the resolution adopted by the House, there can be no doubt that in the future his sole aim will be to bring the result of the Potter investigation before the House in such a shape as to put that House, should it have a Democratic of mail 409,867.

The committee are of opinion that upon the diminution of alcoholic consumption, may be safely predicted an increase of sobriety and a diminution of crime, thus decreasing the necessary expenditures for police and criminal courts and talls. and jails.

Coming to the important question revenue, the committee estimates that $600,000 would be realized in St. Louis from beer alone, and that the sale of whisky, and other alcoholic drinks, would certainly double this sum, thus showing a revenue from this mode of taxation of near $2,000,000 a year. Besides, the floating population, strangers as well as residents, would thus help to
